

Sound too low on android

Continue

I'm an audiophile. While I write in my office, I listen to vinyl through a modified turntable that produces glorious analog sound in ways no digital file could touch. Suffice it to say, when I am relegated to using a mobile device to enjoy music, the enjoyment isn't exactly what I'm accustomed to. But the struggle doesn't have to be that painful. Even with less-than-ideal headphones, it is possible to enjoy the sound from your Android device that is perfectly tuned for your hearing. How? With a free app from the Google Play Store, called Neutralizer. I've used Neutralizer for a while now, and I can attest that this app is a must-have for anyone looking to receive the best sound from their device. However, the app isn't quite as easy to use as a simple five or ten band equalizer. In fact, without explanation, the app can be really confusing. Fortunately, I've gone through the challenging part and am here to make Neutralizer easy for you. With that said, let's install and perfect your Android sound. SEE: Job description: Android developer (Tech Pro Research) Installation Installation of Neutralizer is the easy part. Just follow these steps: Open the Google Play Store on your Android device. Search for Neutralizer. Locate and tap the entry by AUDIOMATIC by Javeo. Tap Install. Allow the installation to complete. You should now see a launcher on your home screen or in your App Drawer (or both). Tap the launcher to open the app. Usage First off, do not try to use Neutralizer from the device speakers. In order to get the most out of the app, you need to listen through headphones. It is also important to do this in a quiet room (to better hear the cut-off points of the tones). Here's how Neutralizer works: You create a profile. You step through each frequency and adjust each up or down until you can no longer hear the tone. You name and save the profile. Here are the specifics for creating a profile. From the main window (Figure A), tap the + button in the bottom right corner. Figure A Tap the left-pointing arrow until it is on the 32 Hz frequency, and then adjust the dial until you can no longer hear the tone. You want to stop adjusting the second when the tone drops completely out. Once you've reach that point, tap the right-pointing arrow to the next frequency and follow the same steps. Do this until you step through each frequency. When you're finished, tap the check in the upper right corner of the window (Figure B). Figure B You will be prompted to save the profile. Tap SAVE, and you're good to go. You can name (or rename) the profile by tapping the edit button and then tapping the name. Your profile is complete. Make sure the Neutralizer enable switch is in the ON position (from the main window), and that the sound produced by your Android device will be perfectly tuned for your hearing. The caveats As you've come to expect, there are always caveats. There are only three here, but they could be a breaking point for you. The first is that with the free version of the app, you can only save one profile. This isn't a problem if you're the only one using the device. However, if you use your device with different headphones or connected in your car, you might want different profiles to match those devices/environments. The premium version is an in-app purchase. After you create a profile, tap the + button to create a new profile to be prompted to purchase the premium app. The second caveat is that the app won't help the sound from your device's built-in speakers. This app shines when used in conjunction with either headphones or a connected Bluetooth device (or auto). Finally, depending on your hearing, the changes can be very subtle. What you experience may vary, depending on a few factors. For me, the sonic changes were subtle but important. With Neutralizer enabled I finally feel like I'm gaining the most out of the Android soundscape. So keep all of this in mind when you work with Neutralizer. Scientists discovered a new species of dinosaur called the Tlatolophus galorum. (Image credit: Luis V. Rey) Paleontologists discovered fossils of a plant-eating dinosaur that belonged to a previously unknown species, one that was likely "talkative," based on the ear structure, which would've been adept at picking up low-frequency sounds.The tail of the dinosaur, which lived 73 million years ago, was first discovered in 2005 in the Cerro del Pueblo Formation near Presa de San Antonio in Coahuila, northern Mexico, according to a new study describing the findings. About eight years later, paleontologists from the National Institute of Anthropology and History (INAH) in Mexico and the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM) worked together to recover the tail and any other remains. They needed to quickly rescue the tail that was protruding from the surface of the Earth, which was exposed to rain and erosion, according to the statement.Related: Photos: Early dinosaur cousin looked like a Croc"Although we had lost hope of finding the upper part of the specimen, once we recovered the tail we continued digging under where it was located," lead author Ángel Alejandro Ramírez Velasco, from the UNAM's Institute of Geology, said in a statement. "The surprise was that we began to find bones such as the femur, the scapula and other elements."Archeologists with the INAH and the UNAM recovered the dinosaur in northern Mexico. (Image credit: Instituto Nacional de Antropología e Historia (INAH))The dinosaur remains were well preserved, suggesting the individual had died in a sediment-rich body of water that would have been quick to blanket and protect the remains, according to the statement. In fact, the paleontologists were able to recover 34 bones fragments, which made up 80% of the dinosaur's skull, including its crest, its lower and upper jaws, palate and neurocranium, the part of the skull that would have housed the brain.Because the researchers could recover so much of the dinosaur's skull, they were able to compare this individual with other known species. At first, based on its tail, the researchers knew the dinosaur belonged to a family of duck-billed dinosaurs called hadrosaurs. But they quickly realized that the crest and nose differed from those of any known hadrosaurs, and what they had in their hands represented a new genus and species.The researchers named the species Tlatolophus galorum. They named the genus after the Nahuá Indigenous group's word tlatolli, which means "word," and the Greek word lophus, which means "crest." The name is fitting, as the dinosaur's crest is shaped like a "virgula" or "a symbol used by Mesoamerican peoples to represent communicative action and knowledge in itself in codices," according to the statement.By examining the structure of the ear bones, the researchers were even able to get a glimpse at how the dinosaurs may have communicated. "We know that they had ears with the ability to receive low-frequency sounds, so they must have been peaceful but talkative dinosaurs," Ramírez Velasco said in the statement. The dinosaurs may have also emitted loud sounds to scare off carnivores or for breeding, he said.The findings were published on May 11 in the journal Cretaceous Research.Originally published on Live Science.
