How to Identify Fake News in 10 Steps

ProQuest

Beware fake or misleading news.
Be skeptical. Ask Questions.
Verify
It's up to you.

➡ Select "Yes" or "No" to the following questions.
The more thumbs-down icons you select, the more likely the news article is fake.

1. Do a Visual Assessment

Assess the overall design. Fake news sites often look amateurish, have lots of annoying ads, and use altered or stolen images.

Overall, does the news article and website seem high quality?

Yes

No

2. Identify the News Outlet

The Wall Street Journal and CNN are examples of news outlets. If you haven't heard of the news outlet, search online for more information.

Is the news outlet well known, well respected, and trustworthy?

Yes

No

3. Check the Web Domain

Many fake news URLs look odd or end with ".com.co" or ".lo" (e.g., abcnews.com.co) to mimic legitimate news sites.

Does the URL seem legitimate?

Yes

No

4. Check the "About Us" Section

Trustworthy news outlets usually include detailed background information, policy statements, and email contacts in the "About/About Us" section.

Does the site provide detailed background information and contacts?

Yes

No

5. Identify the Author

Fake news articles often don't include author names. If included, search the author's name online to see if he or she is well known and respected.

Does the article have a trusted author?

Yes

No

6. Identify the Central Message

Read the article carefully. Fake news articles often push one viewpoint, have an angry tone, or make outrageous claims.

Does the article seem fair, balanced, and reasonable?

Yes

No

7. Assess Spelling, Grammar, and Punctuation

If the article has misspelled words, words in ALL CAPS, poor grammar, or lots of "...", it's probably unreliable.

Does the article have proper spelling, grammar, and punctuation?

Yes

No

8. Analyze Sources and Quotes

Consider the article's sources and who is quoted. Fake news articles often cite anonymous sources, unreliable sources, or no sources at all.

Does the article include and identify reliable sources?

Yes

No

9. Find Other Articles

Search the internet for more articles on the same topic. If you can't find any, chances are the story is fake.

Are there multiple articles by other news outlets on this topic?

Yes

No

10. Turn to Fact Checkers

FactCheck.org, Snopes.com, PolitFact.com are widely trusted fact-checking websites.

Do the fact checkers say the news story is true?

Yes

No

➡ Based on your research, do you think the article is more likely to be true or false? Explain.

With that in mindÄ Ä ÄÄ That being said, s³ because a nonNation leans to one side of the corridor, this Ä Ä necessarily invalidates the trustworthiness of the whole ³. So, what exactly are not fake? According to Dictionary.com, itÄs ü ³Ä When browsing particular sources of non-contents, sites such as Media Bias Fact Check can be useful. The site presents a slideshow scale ü more than 3500 media sources, which were punctuated by the reliability of Ävery lowÄÄ Ä Although all the major sources of non-actuals, on both sides of the corridor, could be accused of leaving their worm tilted in a little time in time, which does not immediately discredit the taking completely. So when is it that a source of non³nations crosses the line in false territories? Generally speaking, when a source or ³ prioritizes the promotion of a particular opinion, ideology or belief, instead of focusing on the reporting of facts supported by evidence, it is crossing that line. Photo Courtesy; image / Getty Images Breitbart News, for example, A prime example of a source that has become radicalized that classifies it as änew With a consistent record of reporting based on conspiracy and speculation theories, Breitbart earned a reputation for being trustworthy and harmful. While some sources are quite easy to identify as not-³, others may be a little less obvious. is why sites like Media Bias Fact Check use a set of criteria to generate reliability rankings. These considerations ü also be helpful when you are not judging a site or article on your ³. Be search for the following: Wording Bias: Does the source tend to use words that guide ü and the reader's ³ in the direction of a biased conclusion? The headline clearly and accurately conveys what the story is ?? Reliable Sourcing: Where does the source get the facts it tells? Are they supported by well-sourced evidence? Perspective: Does the font tend to present both sides of each story ³ in a very rounded way or simply the one that best supports a predetermined agenda? Political Leaning: How is the collective political view of the source evident in its content? Do your stories ³ to be shaped in a way that defends one particular political party while demonizing the other? Fund Another solid way to increase the credibility of a source? Check who is the are and what the mission statement ³ source says. For example, Politico was founded in 2007 by John F. Harris and Jim VandeHei, both former Washington Post journalists. VandeHei left Politico in 2016 to co-found (and act as CEO of) another media group called Axios. Currently, Politico is supervised by chief editor Matthew Kaminski. Photo courtesy of: Headquartered in Virginia, Politico is a source of mainstream political news and distributes content through Politico, magazines, online, radio and podcasts. Much of its coverage revolves around Washington D.C.'s political activity, including the events of Congress, the President and lobbyists. Politico also publishes a wide variety of opinion articles, which tend to focus on matters of national importance or well-founded political analysis. According to the statement of vision 'sources, 'politic strives to be the dominant source of politics and politics in power centers on all continents where access to reliable information, apartdary journalism and real-time tools creates, informs and involves a global citizenship. Media Bias Fact Check gave the popular source a "high credibility " Ad Fontes Media, an online static media bias chart, also placed the Politico among the most reliable news features based on its research and methodology. As for the bias goes, Politico tends to lean slightly to the left, but not in the extension of other major media such as MSNBC or CNN, becoming a fairly balanced source of news. Photo courtesy of: Politico Magazine/Facebook In general, a good way to determine the reliability of information from a news source is first to ask if your content tends to focus more on reports based on facts or opinions-based analyses. In addition, you mustTransparent source in question is about the difference between the two approaches. Politic, for example, openly admits the publication of both aspects of facts-based coverage and opinion. In addition, the politician clearly demarcates their opinion pieces, unlike smaller publishings, which can print articles based on opinion as fact.
